I'm Carol, owner of Wellbeing Pathways

Passionate about improving health

As a nurse I understand, pain and its effects not just on the person with the pain but on relationships and ways of life. I needed to find my strength and use skills to manage my own pain when, following an accident and surgery I was left needing to learn to walk again. I found that using hypnotherapy and mindfulness techniques really helped me get through those difficult days, and to stay focused, positive and motivated in my recovery.

Having undertaken additional training, I now support clients using hypnotherapy and mindfulness, to improve the quality of their life by learning ways to manage their pain and its effects.

I am a certified and registered clinical hypnotherapist and mindfulness instructor.

About

At some time in our lives, we have all experienced pain when our body tells us there is a problem and we need to do something about it.

It's important we make a decision about the need to seek medical advice and appropriate treatment.

Maybe you already know about the many ways to manage pain such as medical support and alternative therapies, but have you ever thought about pain management as a skill you can learn and develop from the resources you have within you?

Yes, those resources are already there. Hypnotherapy and mindfulness can help you find, release and use your resources to manage pain and its effects on daily life, even if for any reason your pain is chronic and long term. There is hope for you to learn techniques to manage that pain.
